

Machine identity has two axes: absolute level (payload) and relational physics (couplings). The invariant atlas is blind to one and lives on the other; a learned representation outreads it on clean data and is destroyed by sensor change.

